The FARRIER knows...

Cover Story

...it's more than just a game

He wears a baseball cap advertising a local feed store and striped bib overalls. He swaggers slightly as he walks, his eyes crinkle with humor, his lips twitch into a grin at the slightest provocation.

Although relatively short, he's well-muscled and slightly burly. When he speaks you're never sure if you'll hear him or his remarkably accurate imitation of John Wayne's rounded tones.

To look at him, you might guess he was a stevedore or a truck driver or maybe an engineer on a train. But Hal Burge is, in his words, an 'equine podiatrist' or farrier — and a very successful one.

For the uninitiated, farriers (horseshoers) are alive and thriving in the West Valley. Burge, owner and operator of Double M Horseshoeing in Upland, has been a farrier for about 14 years and says that he never has to worry about the next customer.

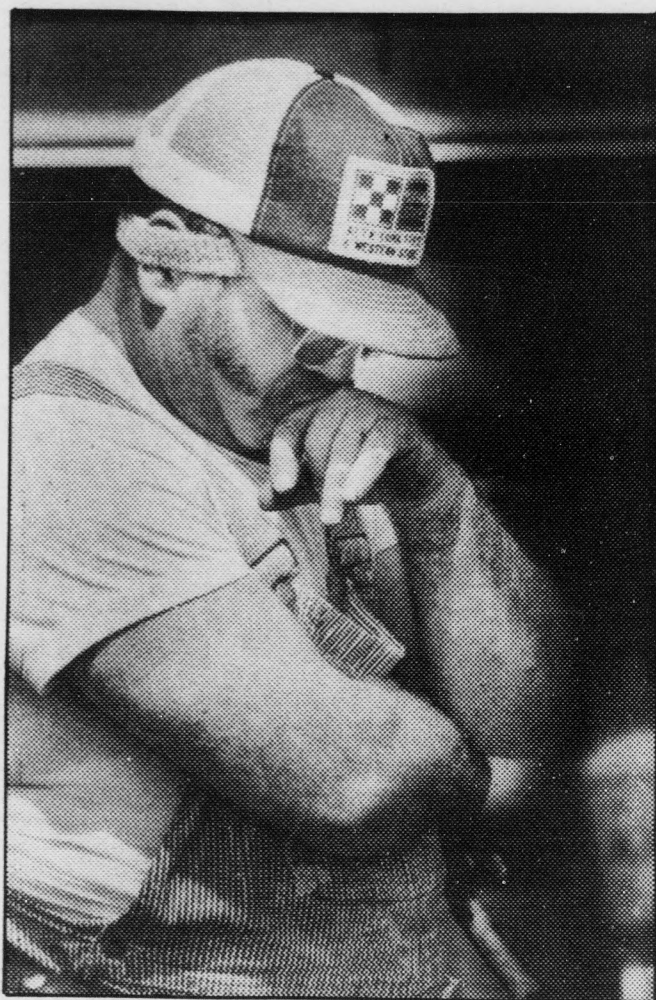

"When I first started, I handed out business cards but pretty soon word-of-mouth was enough. I don't even have cards anymore."

Burge, who was a CPA and a flying instructor before he decided to become a farrier, has never regretted his decision. "I remember thinking how I wanted to be independent and be my own boss and then I heard a commercial on the radio and decided it sounded like the answer."

Although he admits his body really takes a beating (he's been kicked numerous times, picked up and thrown, and nipped), he said he enjoys his job too much to give it up.

"After all, if a horse is 'rank' or poorly schooled, I just don't shoe them anymore."

"I remember one horse who just wasn't going to let me shoe him and he put his head down, and picked me up with his teeth and tossed me across the pasture. When I got home that night and took off my clothes my wife said that was some hickey I had on my back."

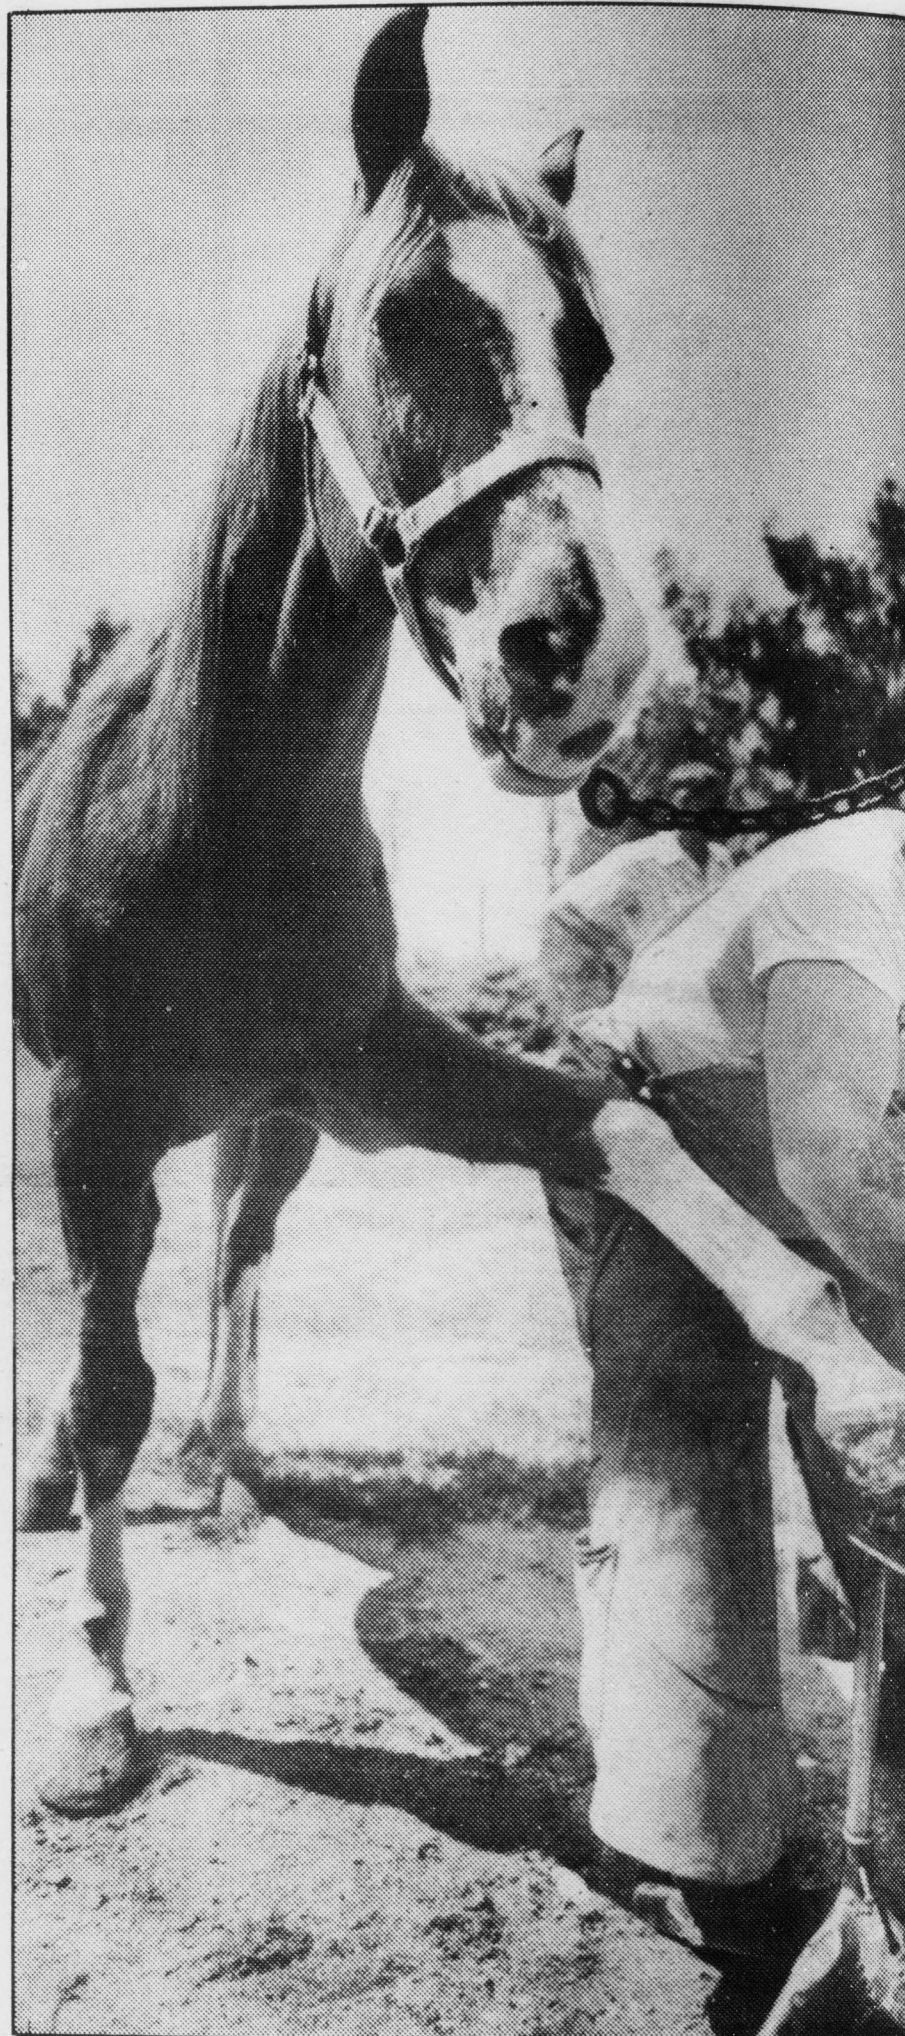

Burge says what most people don't realize is even the best most well-mannered horse can spook. "A horse can be used to you and never have given you a spot of trouble and then a leaf or something goes by and boom, he explodes."

"Horses have sense, feelings just like people. Some are SOBs, others are sweethearts. Some of them would sit on your lap if you let them, some of them try."

He admits although horses are not all that intelligent, they do have personalities. "Horses have sense, feelings just like people. Some are SOBs, others are sweethearts. Some of them would sit on your lap if you let them, some of them try," he said with a grin.

Burge says a lot of people assume farriers do what they do because they have a low intellect or because they can't do anything else. "Not true," he insists. "The idea of the village blacksmith and the village idiot being one and the same isn't true. If you don't know what you're doing, you just don't last in this business."

To be a farrier, Burge said, you must be knowledgeable about the structure and function of the foot and limb, possess physical and mental abilities of at least average and have experience and common sense.

Burge rates common sense very highly on his scale of necessary attributes. "Many people think you don't feel pain. But believe me, when a 1,000 pounds of horse explodes on you, it hurts. You can't let that macho thing get in the way. You have to use common sense and judge your limitations"

Story by Joy Sommer

He carries everything he needs in the back of his economy pickup and visits his 'friends' whenever they give him a call. "I don't have customers, just friends," he says with a twinkle. "If a sorehead calls, I just don't return the calls. I don't need the business."

None of Burge's six children are planning careers in the family business mostly because Burge has discouraged them. "My eldest son is tall and when he said he wanted to give it a try, I did all I could to talk him out of it. Physically it's very rough, plus he's really too tall to do it for very long without killing his back."

"Horseshoeing hasn't changed that much since the days of the Romans (they put leather sandals on the horses) and I imagine years from now, there will still be farriers."

It may be the Age of Computers but it doesn't look like the farriers craft will be replaced by one. □

WETAS offers services 365 days a year

*By Mitzi Pollard
Director of West End
Toxic Abuse Service*

West End Toxic Abuse Service (WETAS) is a non-profit organization devoid of any federal, state, county or local funding. It was founded as a result of increasing social problems in connection with alcohol abuse, problem drinking, or the disease of alcoholism, particularly as these problems relate to the drinking driver. WETAS has the unique distinction of being one of the few organizations of this type that tend to favor the distaff side in top management. Mitzi Pollard, widow of past director Jim Pollard, was unanimously elected by the governing board of directors to succeed him as program director. Also with the staff as office manager is Donna McGee, for many years associated with our organization, and who has many years direct experience in the fields of alcohol and drug abuse rehabilitation. The governing board of directors, composed of paraprofessionals from surrounding communities keeps a watchful eye on the operations and activities of the organization, making certain that all founding principles are constantly perpetuated by the entire staff.

The primary function of WETAS is providing its services on a 24-hour-per-day, 365-days-a-year basis to any and all persons residing in the many cities and communities in the west end of San Bernardino County and adjoining areas in Los Angeles County. Its office facilities are open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday to Friday each week and a 24-hour-per-day answering service ensures that all requests for needed services are promptly received, evaluated and properly dealt with.

At the WETAS facility located at 414 E. Ninth St., Upland, a variety of educational and rehabilitative programs are available, ranging from the County Certified and Approved First Offender DUI (Driving Under the Influence) Program created by California legislation in Assembly Bill No. 541, enacted and passed into law effective January 1, 1982, to the year-long Alcohol Education and Rehabilitation Programs for the repeat offenders convicted of two or more DUI offenses by the West End courts of Divisions of San Bernardino County Judiciary.

WETAS also provides similar programs to accommodate industry and any citizens of Upland or surrounding communities on a self-referral basis. Also available is outside counseling for persons involved with alcohol-related problems. It is particularly gratifying to staff and board members of WETAS that the judiciary in the West End courts are standing solidly behind the new First Offender Legislation for the conviction of driving under the influence of alcohol and/or drugs.

WETAS goals for the future are primarily that all providers of similar services in the West End area can continue to fulfill the needs of the area and perhaps eventually be able to combine individual facility efforts toward a workable plan of providing the most effective service of this type to the continuing benefit of all the citizenry. WETAS is hopeful that methods may be found of generating donations from citizens of our local area to help further the fight in battling the problems of alcohol abuse and especially the drinking driver. The WETAS organization each year does participate in the Community Health Fair at the Montclair Plaza, making a valiant effort to promote public attention to the services that are available.

Police to book book thieves?

By Andrea Adelson

Book-lovers not only have strong attachments to their favorite biographies, they have strong ideas about others who are careless with borrowed novels.

An Upland resident suggested strong-arm tactics to recover what amounts to a hoard of books — $12,000 worth in the last six months — that haven't been returned to Upland's branch library.

Gordon R. Mills, in a recent letter to the City Council, suggested that "a uniformed policeman, who is new to the job" should collect book fines for the library.

Mills, who has infrequently made suggestions on how Upland should run City Hall, said "those who fail to return books are no different than any other criminal and they should be forced to repay or return books."

"If a uniformed policeman came to my door, I would be more shaken up than from a polite letter from a collection agency," Mills, 80, said in a telephone interview.

Librarian Linda Yao said "that's not the first time that's come up," but police have never been deployed as the library's bill collector.

She said Mills' suggestion would be forwarded to the library board. Seriously? "No," she said.

Upland police patrol supervisor, Lt. Fred Schneider, said his rookies have no business collecting fines. "We're criminal investigators, not a civil servant," he said, adding that officers will investigate a theft.

"They are lending it to you. If you take the book and intend to keep it, that's theft. Proving theft with a lending organization is hard," Schneider said.

Yao said the culprits, with large overdue accounts, leave town, "which is why we went to the collection agency."

Beginning last month, fines have been collected by a professional agency. Library patrons who fail to return books after several warnings now risk a tarnished credit rating.

Average replacement costs for hardcover fiction and nonfiction is about $14 and $20, respectively, according to Publisher's Weekly, Yao said.

Mills said "I've always been interested in things. Those who are in authority don't ever take suggestions. But it struck me, to pay money out to an agency, it could be a saving."

Although Mills did voice an opinion over a redevelopment plan rejected by voters last November, he hasn't written to the Council for at least 15 years, he recalled.

Then he complained about water wasted when the fire department cleaned out a hydrant and flooded his street.

The response, he said, was some "gobbledygook" about the expense of sending a tanker truck to store the water and spread it elsewhere.

Coffinmaker earns a living catering to funeral homes

By Andrea Adelson

Jack Sherman has heard all the jokes about "dying to get to work" and "stiff competition."

He's a coffinmaker.

He cuts a casket shell from four-by-eight-foot particle board sheets in 90 minutes and sells the unfinished pieces, much like unfinished furniture, to four coffin manufacturers.

They, in turn, brush it with glue, cover it with textured cloth, put an interior in, attach hardware and sell the caskets to funeral homes.

Draper and Richardson-Peterson mortuaries in Ontario buy his boxes from Green Acre Manufacturing in Gardena.

Sherman's caskets are the low-cost variety. Finished wood and metal boxes top the line.

He wants to expand the line, fabricated out of his workshop in an Upland industrial park, to coffin-style furniture, such as chests, something he says is popular in the east.

"People are strange enough anymore, they get into it," said the bearded 33-year-old, a fifth-generation Californian.

Aside from selling to normal casket buyers, he said every Halloween a few ghoulish-pranksters purchase the unfinished versions for about $100 each.

Sherman has been sawing wood into caskets for more than six years, first with a Fontana firm and for the last 18 months on his own.

The coffinmaker had no carpentry experience when he lost his job as a Corona schools speech therapist during a round of state budget cuts that eliminated the program.

But he comes from a line of woodworkers. Sherman's father is a retired U.S. Forest Service ranger and his great-grandfather founded the Sherman sawmill in Idyllwild.

"I make a lot more money doing this than teaching, but I do miss teaching," he said. Sherman attended the University of Idaho in Moscow on a track scholarship and graduated from Cal State, Los Angeles.

Competition among casketmakers is just as difficult as in the rest of the marketplace, he says.

Domestic coffinmakers sell boxes at give-away prices to build clientele, and cheap imports from a subsidized industry in Mexico also undercut his prices.

"I keep plugging away and they keep coming," he said.

In an effort to lower his prices, that he declined to disclose, Sherman suggested to manufacturers that they assemble the boxes themselves, cutting shipping costs and his overhead.

Sherman makes eight different box styles, none of them the kite-shaped Dracula version.

"I get periodic help from my father-in-law, and my wife is getting to be a pro at this," he said, holding up a half-moon brace his wife, Barbara, 31, cuts on a jigsaw. Their 4-year-old daughter, Jocelyn, contributes to the family enterprise by picking up scraps.

Green Acre has asked him to work on a new style in stained oak, one that will be introduced at the California Funeral Directors Association conference in Palm Springs next month.

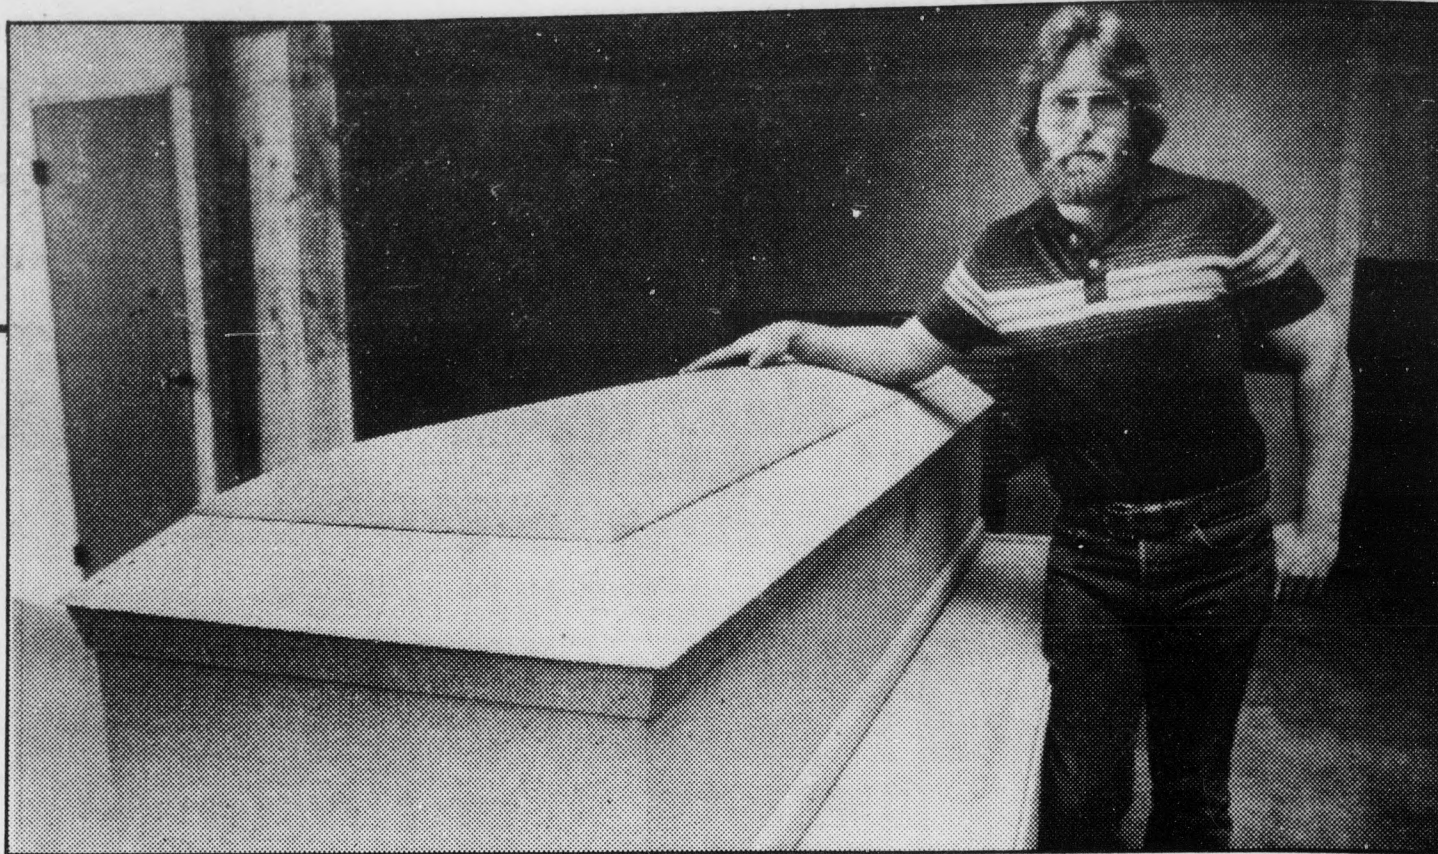

Like proud parents with new offspring, "everyone brings out their new designs," Sherman said.

Caskets are made in a standard size, 24 inches wide and 80 inches long, except for a smaller one for infants. The rounded lids he buys from a Tennessee wood molding firm.

He recalled making one 5-foot wide and 6-foot-6-inches long. "It was huge," Sherman said.

"It's not very often do you get that. A lot of big

'Showcase '83' planned

"Showcase '83," sponsored by the Auxiliary of the Children's Home Society, will be the home of Dr. and Mrs. F.J. Bescoby, 2222 N. Euclid Ave., Upland.

Each year the Claremont auxiliary sponsors a tour of a home to raise money for the society activities. Showcase '83 tours begin April 16 and continue through May 1.

The Bescoby home was built in 1907 by Col. James and Mrs. Mary Paul. The two-story home has about 5,500 square feet of floor space and had been professionally decorated. The house includes a video room, sun room and a library.

Tour times are Tuesday through Friday, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Saturdays and Sundays, 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.

Tickets are $5 and may be purchased at the door. All profits go to Children's Home Society.

New Coin Club meeting place

The Upland Coin Club has moved to a new meeting location at the Magnolia Recreation Center, 651 W. 15th St., a half-block east of San Antonio Avenue.

Next meeting of the group will be Saturday, April 23, 8 p.m. Featured speaker will be John Baker, San Clemente who will talk and auction on Philatelic Numismatic Combinations (PNT). It means any stamp and coin that are united in one form or another.

Membership in the club is open to all individuals interested in coin collecting. Monthly educational programs are aimed at both beginners and advanced collectors. Parking and admission are free.

For information call 984-9698.

Civil War program slated

Chaffey Communities Cultural Center will present Stories of the Civil War during a special program on Sunday, April 17 at 2 p.m.

Dr. Robert Davis, a professor at Chaffey College, will put on "A Dramatized Multi-Media History of the Civil War."

Davis has developed this program through the use of music, acting and films to bring alive the times of the civil war.

Davis said he became interested in the stories of the war after reading from the diary of his great-uncle Timothy McCarthy who served as an engineering officer in the US Navy. Davis will wear McCarthy's uniform and medals during the presentation.

Special displays will be on view from the museums Civil War collection. The museum, 525 W. 18th St., will open at 1 for browsing.

Library plans 'reading day'

The Upland Library will conduct a "reading day" for children and their parents Saturday from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m.

The program will include a storybook parade, story tellers, children's theater performances, the Riede Marionettes and Courtney Brooks with her puppets.

Booths demonstrating bookbinding, button-making and choral reading are also planned.

Admission is free.

Glut means sour times for local lemon growers

By David Miller

Local lemon growers are battling an international citrus glut that has depressed prices worldwide and may, in fact, threaten their very livelihood.

This has been a boom year for lemons, and an upswing in domestic production has joined with an ever-growing volume of production abroad to spell near-doom to growers in the foothill area. As a result of worldwide over-production, prices have dropped so low that, in many cases, growers cannot even meet their picking and transportation expenses.

The situation is not uncommon. In fact, incidences of over-production of lemons occur so frequently that the fruit has been referred to as "the classic cyclical commodity."

In years where there are shortages, high prices encourage growers to plant new lemon trees, and with the new, higher volume, prices drop, forcing some growers to later pull out their plantings. This eventually creates another shortage, which drives prices back up and encourages more plantings, and the cycle continues.

The cycle is sometimes interrupted or altered by weather conditions such as a freeze, but this has not occurred during the last several years. Except for this year's storms, which caused some wind damage, recent winters have been so mild that there has been continual growth, contributing to the boom.

Production by international growers, primarily in Spain and Italy, has increased so dramatically during the last several years that lemon growers in the United States are having a difficult time maintaining high sales levels in traditionally reliable markets in Europe and in Japan. The quality of fruit grown in Europe and in the U.S. are comparable, but several factors have come into play that make the U.S. products more expensive to buyers here and abroad and make the foreign competition more attractive.

During a recent week, the average domestic shipping price for a single carton of lemons (a carton equals roughly 37.5 pounds) was $7.23 as compared to $7.34 for the same week a year ago. That has had some affect on the average domestic price for the year to date, which has been running above what it was last year.

While Eastern Bloc countries have traditionally been a dependable market for lemons grown in this country, the high level of worldwide production, combined with a strong U.S. dollar that favors tourists but works to the disadvantage of producers, has left the cost of shipping U.S lemons almost double that of its European competitors.

With the current level of the American dollar vis-a-vis European currency, U.S. lemons have become too expensive for European buyers. Simply put, European buyers are not very likely to spend $13 or more to get U.S. lemons when they can obtain the fruit from Italy or Spain for half that price. Says Gerry Davidson, the Southern California grower relations representative for Sunkist Growers, Inc.: "We have a better quality fruit (than European growers) but we can't push a whole lot of it at those prices."

"They (Spanish growers) will sell their fruit cheaper than we pay on our freight charges, and they can make money on it," said Bruce Goetting, manager of the Upland Growers Association.

Sales to Japan have remained strong, however, and the industry has tried to compensate for the increased competition in other areas. Lemons that cannot be sold fresh can be targeted for production to make juice or frozen concentrate, but the

The production market also serves as additional competition for the fresh fruit market. While the industry can somewhat offset the effects of a fresh fruit glut through production, it does little to ease

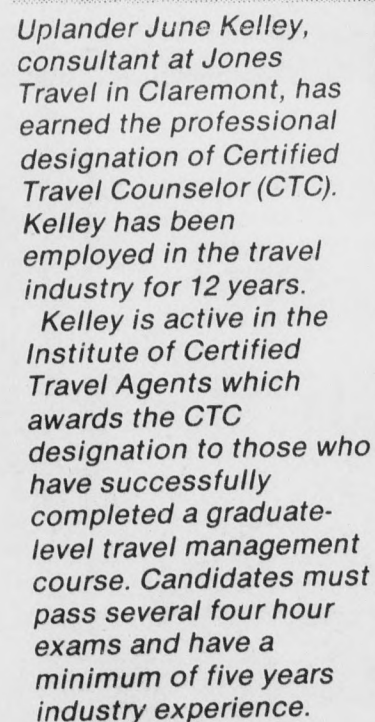

In the region from La Verne to Etiwanda, only lemon groves remain where many varieties of citrus fruit once grew in abundance. And the region, which reaches into parts of both Los Angeles and San Bernardino counties, is relatively small as citrus producing areas go, making up only slightly more than one percent of the total fruit-bearing Already crippled by depressed prices, lemon growers in Upland are facing two other obstacles which may in time prove insurmountable: A crop that matures too soon, and the popularity of the region among housing developers.

In fact, Goetting, who as manager of Upland Growers represents about 200 growers, said lemon production in Upland will probably disappear with Chaffey Communities Cultural Center-Museum houses a collection of some of Upland and Ontario's greatest historical treasures.

The museum includes a grand box piano, dating back to 1871; a collection of Civil War, World War I and II military clothing, camping equipment and fighting paraphernalia; and Indian relics such as peace pipes, drums, straw woven baskets, blankets, pottery and bow and arrows.

Even the building itself is an historical monument.

It is an old St. Mark's Episcopal Church which was built and designed by one of Southern California's old-time architects, Arthur P. Benton, in the early 1900s. The museum building is only one of a few Benton structures still preserved.

The building was moved in 1965 from its original site on Euclid Avenue, to its present site on West 18th Street.

The museum is run by volunteers and all the items are donated.

"Each article that is donated to us has to be accessible," says Eunice Mitchell, one of two volunteers who run the archive system at the museum.

"Every article has to be filed and crossed-indexed," adds Mitchell's co-worker, Dorothy Schowalter. "Through this filing system, we are able to look up each item and give information on when it came in and who was the donor."

The crossed index allows the luxury of having historical information at hand for all the different museum subjects.

The museum serves as an historical library for not only the Upland/Ontario area, but for other parts of the world as well. There is a doll collection donated by Howard Clark that includes dolls which appeared in India in 1934, Mexico in 1937, Cuba in 1939, Russia in 1940, and New Orleans in 1871.

"We don't accept just donations for items that deal with the history to this area; we accept any donation that deals with history," Mitchell explains. "We never turn down a donation unless the item is in really bad shape. But if it can be fixed, it'll be accepted."

All maintenance and repair work done for the museum is voluntary.

"The only real problem we're having is trying to find volunteers. The only income for the museum is the membership fee for the board members and what we make on rummage sales and things like that," says Mitchell, the 12-year volunteer veteran.

The most recent item donated to the museum is a picture of the founding father of the Upland/Ontario area, George Chaffey.

Chaffey laid out a model city in what is now Ontario and Upland. Then he went on to Australia and established Mildura, which is now known as Upland's Sister City.

"We have recieved some gifts from people of Mildura who are visiting Southern California," Mitchell says with a very large smile on her face.

The item that museum workers believe is the most ancient was donated to the cultural center by some local college students.

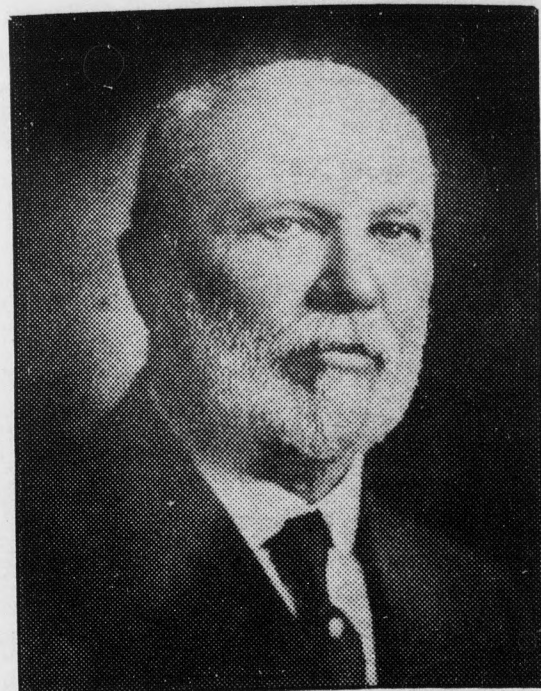

"The oldest article is a fish fossil. We're not exactly sure how old it is. It could be anywhere from three to 10 million years old," says Schowalter.

A lack of funds hampers the museum's efforts to discover the true age of items which only a specialist could evaluate.

On one Sunday each month, the museum has a program in which it selects a discussion and research topic and invites the public to take part. Some of the subjects have included pioneer farm and maintenance tools, native Indian

For Glenda Smith, Tracy Kellogg and Angela Carbone, the Class II State Championship meet was a scene of triumph.

On the strength of their performances, the three local gymnasts has advanced to the regional finals where they will compete against the top Class II gymnasts from Utah, Oregon, Arizona and Northern California to be held in Sunnyvale, Saturday and Sunday.

Smith, from Upland, placed fifth All Around in the Junior division with a score of 67.85, her highest score of the season. She also placed fourth on the vault and fifth on the balance beam.

She competed against 56 other juniors. Kellogg, also from Upland, placed 10th All Around in the Senior division with a score of 65.65, her highest score of the season. She also placed fourth on the uneven bars and sixth on the balance beam.

Carbone, from Alta Loma, placed 11th All Around in the Junior division with a score of 67.05, also her highest score of the season. She also placed eighth in the floor exercise.

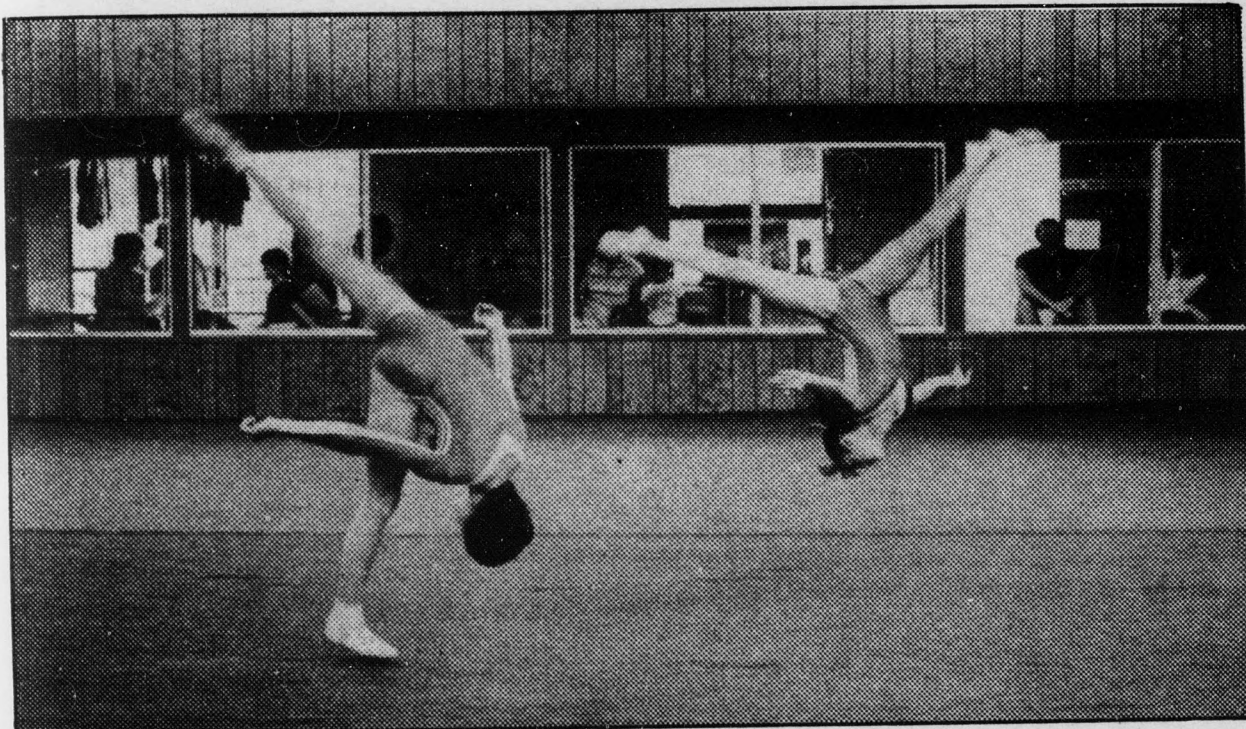

Coach Paul Dyer, Baldy View Gymnastic Team and Center, said 200 Class II gymnasts started this season for Southern California competitions.

"They had to qualify with their best score from three preliminary competitions to enter district championships," he said. "From there, they had to be in the top of their age group to qualify for the state championships (best of Southern California)."

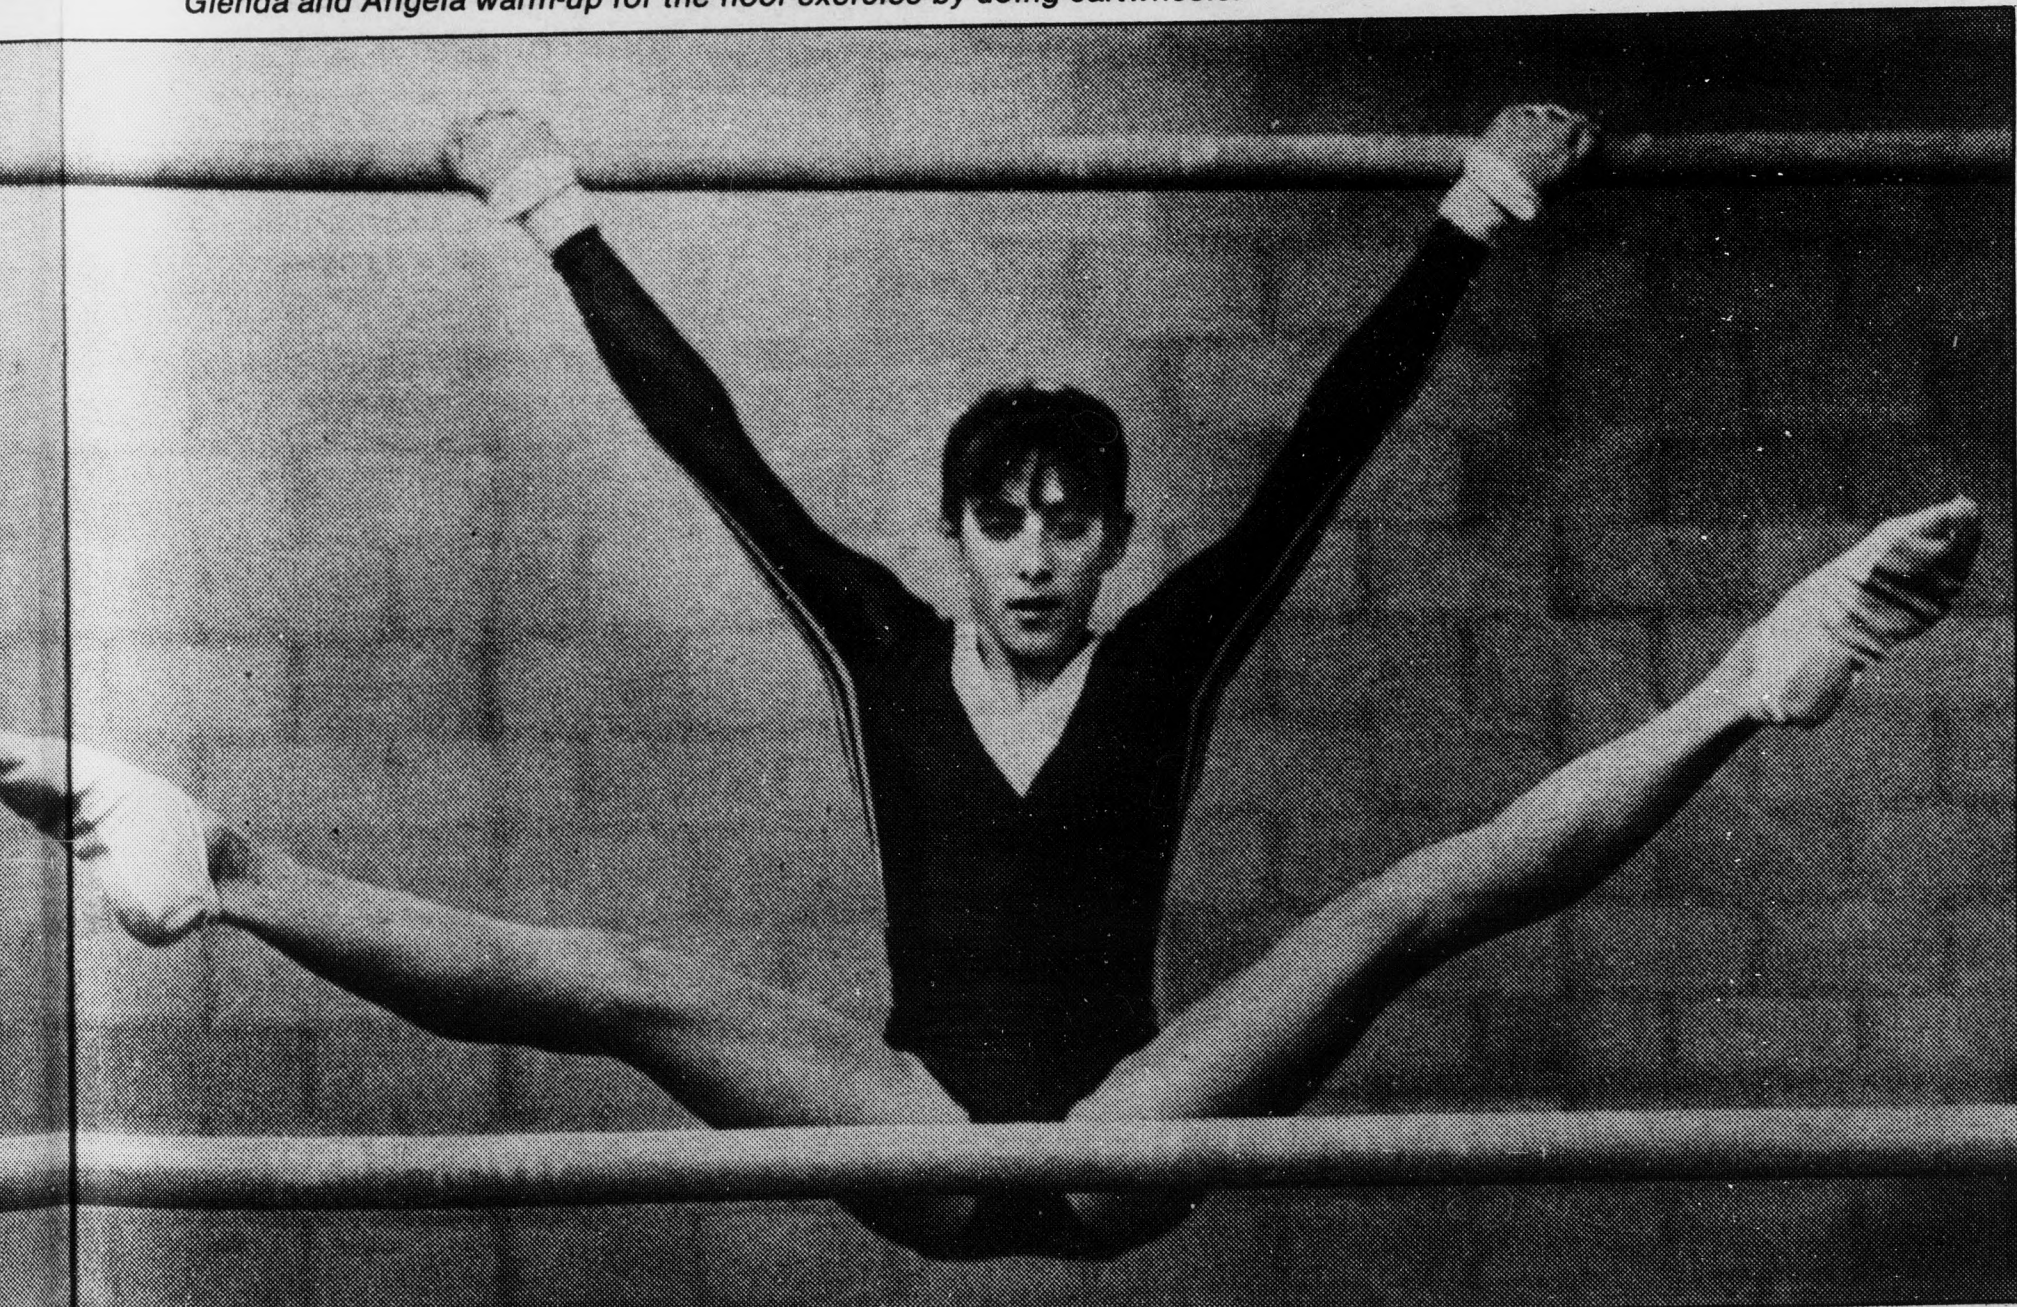

Dyer explained Smith's finish makes her the fifth best Junior Class II gymnast in Southern California. Kellogg is the 10th best Senior Class II gymnast while Carbone is the 11th best Junior Class II title holder.

"The girls are working very hard to prepare for the up-coming meets," Dyer said. "They are working out five hours a day in hopes of placing against the best Class II gymnasts in the Western United States."

"We have high hopes they'll all do extremely well in the final competition." □

Glenda and Angela warm-up for the floor exercise by doing cartwheels.

This is no ordinary COACH

Bob Loney has become a fixture as Upland track coach.

Story by Dennis Arp
Photography by Tom Tondee

Forget for a moment that stereotypical image of a high school coach. You know the guy. He shows up all the time in bad TV commercials and sitcoms, wearing a baseball cap, a whistle and a sweatshirt with "coach" stenciled across the front.

Somewhere in the country there may be someone who fits the stereotype. But he doesn't coach track and cross country at Upland High School.

Meet Bob Loney, which many West Valley sports fans have undoubtedly already done. He's been at Upland for 25 years now, turning kids who like to run into kids who like to win.

Success? The Highlanders' cross country team has been league champion 14 of the last 16 years and been to the CIF finals 13 years in a row. The track team has won four of the last five league titles.

Loney knows the figures as well as Pete Rose knows how many hits he's behind Ty Cobb on the all-time list. It's part of Loney's job as promoter of track and cross country at Upland.

He is part-time publicist, part-time salesman, part-time motivator and full-time teacher. He wears many hats in the process of getting athletes to go out for a sport that is essentially individual and then getting them to perform as a team.

What he doesn't wear, however, is a baseball cap and a sweatshirt. His coaching uniform is the same as the one he wears to teach math: slacks and sport shirt. He carries a stopwatch instead of a whistle.

At 52, he says he still has the same zeal for coaching he brought to Upland 25 years ago. He still issues a mimeographed sheet, sort of an in-house newsletter, to his athletes after every meet. "It's a motivator and an evaluator," he says. "It's hard to get a school record and they don't always get their names in the newspaper. This is one way to get recognition."

Loney had to have a hip socket replaced two years ago but he hasn't let it slow him down. "I can't run but I can do anything else," he says.

Anything else includes more than an hour of cardiovascular lifting three times a week and swimming up to three days a week. His regimen of exercise is sandwiched around his teaching and coaching duties. He's also taking a computer class at Ontario High School. "I keep busy," he says.

Taking a break from his full schedule for an interview, Loney talks matter-of-factly about his coaching accomplishments. He credits his assistants and his athletes for much of Upland's success over the years, but clearly he's proud of the programs that have been built almost from scratch. The blueprints he has followed have been those of a winner.

Maybe because of his math background (he teaches everything from arithmetic through analytic geometry), Loney is analytical in his coaching. He isn't the kind of coach who yells "hustle" or "work hard." In fact, he isn't the kind of coach who yells much of anything. And yet his athletes hustle and work hard.

"Athletics helped me to find my identity and confidence. That's why I got into coaching."

"I've found that if you praise someone when he's doing well and ignore him when he's not doing the job, he'll work his tail off for you," Loney says.

And though he's coached plenty of both, Loney says, "a good competitor will beat a good athlete every time. If I were to name an all-time list it wouldn't be the best athletes, it'd be the best competitors. A lot of good athletes dropped out or didn't even come out."

Getting students involved is a yearly struggle, Loney says. "Kids are afraid of failing," the coach explains. "I work on improvement, but if they never run their first race or give it a try, they're never going to improve. I work on this as much as anything."

Something must be working because 150 boys and girls came out for track this year.

"Individually, you keep telling them why they can do well, what the sport can do for them physically and psychologically. If you want to do well after school you have to be able to handle pressure. Preparing for a meet is the same as preparing for a test or for a job interview.

"Everyone has to learn to handle winning and losing. They both are tough."

Loney not your everyday coach

Loney learned a lot about the positive effects sports can have on an athlete when he was a track and football star at Anderson College in Indiana. He was an all-conference tight end and he set the school record in the 880. "I loved to compete," he says.

"Everyone is searching for his own identity and you need to find something you do well enough to have self-confidence. Athletics helped me to find my identity and confidence. That's why I got into coaching."

Loney began his career as a high school coach of lower division football and basketball teams at Chaffey. He was also an assistant coach of track, a sport that brought him his first head coaching job when Upland had an opening. He gave up football and basketball for track because he'd "had it with referees. When it gets down to the end of a game they control things. The kids should control the outcome and they don't."

A lot of Highlanders are glad Loney chose to come to Upland. And No. 1 on the gratitude parade is the same guy who tops Loney's all-time list of competitors.

The coach had to convince a wiry junior named Steve Scott that he'd be a better distance runner than a baseball player. At the time, Scott wasn't sure. Now he is.

What did it take to get the man who would go on to set the American record in the mile out for track in high school?

"About five hours of recruiting," Loney says. "I talked to him, his mother, his dad, his sister. It took about five hours."

"Oh yes, I remember," Mary Scott, Steve's mom, says. "Steve was thinking football instead of cross country and he was going to play baseball during the track season. There was a lot of talking back and forth. Bob called night and day, I don't know how many times. He was persistent; Bob's good at that.

"I guess he saw something in Steve that others didn't. We're real grateful to Bob, he helped pave the way for all that Steve has been able to accomplish. Of course, Steve thinks the world of him."

Scott, who left for New Zealand recently to compete in several meets, specialized in the 880 in high school. It was after the state meet his senior year that Loney suggested Scott become a miler.

"In the finals (of the 880) he got lane one," Loney remembers. "He got boxed in three times. He was seventh with about 35 yards to go when he saw an opening and shot through to get second. After that I told him to go to the mile because he spent too much time getting boxed in."

Upland fixture

Not all of Loney's proteges went on to set American records but their stays at Upland were nonetheless memorable for Loney.

"You go event by event," he says. "Jim Smith was CIF champion in the 100 and 220 and he still holds more school records than anyone. We had a championship team in '65 and he was a heck of a leader. He had the highest GPA of anyone in the state meet in '66."

Loney is even remembered from his days as a football coach. "One of the sophomores I have now, his dad played football for me in '58 or so," Loney says. "Talking to him, you know he feels like he got something out of athletics because he sure wanted his son to be in athletics. And he sure wanted him on my team."

The story reflects an allegiance that may be typical of athletes who have competed for Loney. Typical, but not stereotypical for a coach who just isn't the conventional type.

When citrus news is good in desert, it's bad locally

the next housing boom. "Citrus happens to grow in good climates and people like to live in good climates."

While conducive to luring potential home buyers, the local climate is not always kind to lemon growers. Climate conditions cause fruit to mature months prior to the onset of summer, the best time of the year for lemon sales. Upland growers therefore must hold out as long as possible before picking in order to compensate for the early arrivals.

"Your local growers pretty much have to wait for the desert period to end," Davidson said. "The best sales are usually by late summer, but your older areas like Upland are usually out of the market by then."

The prime picking months for lemons in Upland are March through May, which is at least a month or two too early. According to Davidson, there has been some talk of using chemicals to delay the maturation process, but the effectiveness of available chemicals is "debatable."

The reality of the situation is that when desert-area growers in the western states experience booms in production — as they are this year — local growers are in trouble. "If this fruit matured two months later, it would bring greater returns to the growers," Goetting said. Now, however, local growers are facing "disastrous returns - if any returns at all."

Most of the local land holdings are small, perhaps 10 acres or less per grower. The total foothill fruit-bearing acreage amounts to about 1,118, only a tiny portion of the 77,000 acres in the western United States that produce citrus fruits.

And there are now 23 countries producing large volumes of citrus, at far higher production levels than ever before. While the smaller production facilities of the local region used to be sufficient enough to guarantee some returns to growers, the future is uncertain.

The next swing in the production cycle may not come soon enough — or bring large enough returns — to offset the damage caused by the present worldwide glut. And as housing development projects continue to spring up in the area, the lemon trees may be faced with an early demise no matter how strong a recovery. □

Upland agrees to close street

Upland's City Council agreed to close a narrow portion of Huntington Drive east of Central Avenue because of potential traffic hazards, reversing an 18-month-old decision by an earlier Council and overriding protests by residents.

Kenel owner Edna McGinnis, who said her business will be harmed when Huntington ends in a cul-de-sac, vowed to sue Upland for loss of income.

McGinnis handed over a 29-signature petition of homeowners, who she said objected to the street closure. "Don't pin us in," she pleaded. "I will lose half my income."

The 4-1 vote Monday, with Mayor John McCarthy disapproving, also overrode a Planning Commission recommendation made last week. Commissioners suggested the alley-like street that parallels Southern Pacific Railroad tracks be restricted to one-way eastbound traffic.

McCarthy said if potential traffic problems are created by the street, located south of a raised rail crossing, those should be corrected.

"People have gotten used to the convenience," he said.

In last week's commission decision, Commissioner Joe Ramos said present property owners' reservations were given short shrift.

Ramos added that supporting evidence for street abandonment is based on traffic hazards from future industrial development and is not a present problem in the area north of Ninth Street.

Chairman Edwin Sloman said he was not surprised the Council overruled the commission's suggestion. He contended the street vacation will worsen conditions at Ninth Street, south of Huntington, a Y intersection without a traffic signal.

No traffic accidents have occurred at the Huntington-Central intersection in the past five years, City traffic engineer Peter Liu said. About 100 cars use the small street daily, he said.

His findings were disputed by a councilman and a Central Avenue office tenant. One related a near-miss and the other said he witnessed an accident at the corner recently.

Even without documented traffic problems presently, city engineers and planners supported street closure for "long-term safety" reasons.

Vacating the street was proposed 18 months ago by Rancho Cucamonga developer John W. Nelson.

quilts and blankets and Christmas specials for children.

Special projects such as open house, displays and bus tours are also available.

Another aspect of history the museum carries is the history of local families.

Henry Albert, who came to the area in the latter 1800s, was quite an inventor. The Albert patents of a can labeling machine and extension steps for railway cars, along with other inventions, are on file in the museum.

Albert kept an extensive diary along with a complete line of ownership of his property which is kept in the library files.

"We do have some history of local families. We get a lot of letters and things from people telling us how it was way back when. A few years ago we received letters of people's experiences traveling in a covered wagon." Showalter says. "There are a lot of families who come across these old relics that belonged to their parents and they have nothing else to do with them. We don't buy anything, it's all donated."

"This volunteer work is a very worth-while organization. We preserve history. All this history would have been lost if not for this building and the people who serve in it," says Mitchell. □

Burying the dead is big business in California. More than 188,000 died here last year and their families spent a conservatively estimated $326 million to bury them, according to association figures.

"California is the least expensive place to die," said association president Ron White, of White's Funeral Home in Azusa. The average cost statewide for cremation is $473, $1,386 for a complete service
